12 WHAT IN THE STARS
by Mike Mikesh

This issue is slightly later than planned. Ed and I were asked to do a review of STARSHIP OPERATOR'S MANUAL, so the TS schedule got slipped a bit. You'll be interested to know it has gone to press, and should be out not long after you receive this.

Other products on the horizon are SECOND SURVEY and COAC from GDW. From DSP are MEGATRAVELLER OM SCREEN & ACCESSORIES and WORLD SURVEY GUIDEBOOK. According to rumor, the former DSP product might be available for Christmas. The latter is GRAND SURVEY and GRAND CENSUS in MegaTraveller format with added material.

As you're aware, the intent of HIMW is to serve as an organization through which its members can have an influence on the TRAVELLER setting. We've succeeded in this regard. And for this coming year, there are a couple of things in the wind that might increase HIMW's impact greatly. Unfortunately, they haven't solidified enough at this stage. So, instead of announcing the good news prematurely, I'll hold off till next issue when Ed or I can report something more concrete.

Dear Fellow TRAVELLER:

With this sixth issue of TIFFANY STAR, the History of the Imperium Working Group (HIWG) marks it's first complete year. One year ago, only a handful of people believed that HIWG was possible or even worth the effort. During the year, over sixty TRAVELLER fans have participated in HIWG projects. HIWG has helped produce the REBELLION SOURCEBOOK (GDW,88), six issues of TS, and a host of HIWG Publications.

The purpose of HIWG is still to develop details of the History of the Imperium which occurred after 1116. To serve this purpose, HIWG is publishing a fanzine (TS); working on assisting three Turning Point Adventures (TPAs); planning other publications, articles, and documents; and indulging in numerous correspondences. HIWG is going places: care to come along?

The aim of HIWG is to develop ideas about the Rebellion for Marc Miller without redundant development occurring. Currently our focus is the TPAs. As a ready source of ideas for TPAs, HIWG needs to continually think of ways to improve the communications flow. TIFFANY STAR provides an outlet for material of use to multiple TPAs, but is not large enough a vehicle for all development of all regions of the Imperium and all times of the Rebellion.

Working papers shared between the State/Pact Analysts, the Sector Analysts, and the Domain Analysts should include info copies to Ed, who will assure Marc receives the information.

To improve the general availability of working papers, they will be listed in "HIWG Publications". This will allow any interested HIWGer (even if not a known interested Analyst) to have access to such papers. Everything submitted for TS, but not used there will likely become a "HIWG Pub". A list of "New HIWG Pubs" will be carried in each issue of TS. The latest copy of HIWG PUB LIST (HPL) is always available for a SASE to Ed. A fuller description of HPL contents is available in HIWG PUBS DIRECTORY (HPD), which will always be listed in "New HIWG Pubs" (in case you are short on cash and need to discriminate). HIWG Pubs will be available to all HIWG members at the least possible cost (currently 10 cents per issue to US and Canadian zip codes and to European addresses). Note that this includes only photocopying and mailing costs and does not include administrative, or development costs. Nor, alas, is the overworked author/artist paid anything.

The length of "personality" articles in TS should be in proportion to the importance of the personality in the Rebellion. Lengthy articles about secondary personalities should be grouped together in proposed HIWG Pubs:

Lucan's Lieutenants
Norris' Lieutenants
Adair's Lieutenants
Adair's Shadows
Oekhos' Images

The further clones of the "real" Stephon are:

HIWG offers the following money back guarantee: if at any time (and for any reason), you wish your HIWG membership to cease, write to Ed and your remaining membership fee will be returned. Likewise, should HIWG ever fold (no such maneuver is currently planned), your remaining membership fees will be refunded.

Starting with TS6, the mailing list of HIWG has been computerized. The number before your name is in the format: NAME-NNN is membership number: EE is the latest issue of TS which your current membership allows you to receive. If this last number is "06", then it is now time for you to renew your HIWG membership.

HIWG: Working together to enhance the Rebellion!

FRIENDS AND ENEMIES
by Mike Mikesch

Those of you familiar with the REBELLION SOURCEBOOK are probably aware of remarks on page 42 about a "Friends and Enemies" table; however, it did not appear in the book. I developed such a table during the summer and went over it with Marc Miller during GenCon/Origins '88. The result appear below.

The table does have "approved" status. But it only applies to the time period between 1117 to 1120. Note that "friendships" are very rare, and that attitudes are not necessarily mutual. Reading horizontally will tell you what the attitude of the named faction is toward each of the others.

Lucan: Anyone that has not declared himself for Lucan is an enemy. Norris is an exception because he is too far and cut off from involvement.

Margaret: She vocally opposes both Lucan and Dulinor for their villainous acts that put them in power. Her sympathies are with the Brothers of Varian, although no formal alliances are established. Brzk similarly opposes Lucan and Dulinor, which is cause for some goodwill from Margaret. But since both are contenders for the Throne, no friendship exists.

Dulinor: He will oppose anyone competing directly against him for the Iridium Throne. Dulinor and Daebi are friends. The remark on the 1120 map, "Clashes Between Dulinor and Daebi," is really an interesting one time event, a possible subject for a Turning Point adventure.

Antares: As a candidate for the Throne, Brzk has declared himself against both Lucan and Dulinor. In his own sector, his fleets actively resist the Vargr raiders, but he has hopes of winning their cooperation through diplomacy.

Daebi: This federation has two established enemies, Lucan and the Solomani. Because Brzk is in active combat with Lucan, and Margaret is similarly defending against the Solomani, these are considerd friends where the Irielish faction is not involved.

Vland: This faction has committed itself to a separate direction, effectively turning its back on the Third Imperium. Its competing with neighboring factions for territory, while ignoring other factions too remote for concern. Conflict between Vland and the Vargr is minimized as Shidana tries to expand its trading sphere coreward.

Strephon: He has no friends among other factions because of doubt regarding his validity. However, Strephon frequently finds favor among the Imperial worlds outside the spheres of control of the other factions.

Brothers of Varian: Margaret sympathizes with this faction and often lends it support. However, they do not necessarily extend friendship to Margaret in turn. Elements within this group may support different factions.

Norris: He will stay as uninvolved with the Rebellion as he can for as long as he can. (See article this issue.)

Aslan: The clans are generally uninvolved in the Imperial Rebellion except with the invasion of Deneb. However, the drama that resulted in the death of the Aslan ambassador on Capital has moved Hierate feelings decidedly against Dulinor.

Vargr: The aggressions of the Vargr are being directed against the Third Imperium, which is now represented by Lucan. They have no particular antipathy against individual factions.

Solomani: All Imperial factions and the Solomani will continue to mistrust the Zhodani because of psionic prejudice. The same attitude is not returned although the Zhodani do see a unified Imperium and Deneb as a threat.

Solomani: All Imperial factions are technically at war with the Solomani, although only a few are involved at the front. The Aslan are regarded as enemies because of the disagreement about the overlap of the Solomani Sphere into the Hierate.

The Imperium's Second Survey (published in 1065) gives Sarar's UPF listing as B767ABA-E. Thus, it is clear that the Sarar region has undergone significant changes in recent decades, and it is not answered by direct observations, the Duke of Sarar. It was neverAbrams' intention to become a turned his attention to Sarar's and aggressively pursuing the region's trade interests throughout the surrounding subsectors, and also investing extensively in technological research and development. He was also concerned with savings in the County of Sarar (1015, 1115, 1116, 1215, 1216, 1316, 1317 Antares), with a view to improving their economies as well.

His plans succeeded — beyond the expectation of many Imperial economists. By 1081, the Sarar region was in the top three of the fastest growing economies of any of the Counties in the Antares sector, and it stayed there. Abrams was able to turn his attention to the other worlds in Sarar's subsector, signing economic and scientific treaties, and improving trade links.

However, for some of the members of the Ring Council, this was not enough. They wanted to coordinate efforts more closely with the other members of the Council (which forms the astrographical region known as the Ring Cluster). Abrams heeded their requests, and after a period of consultation, he had formulated a plan for a form of interstellar trading alliance, with minor responsibilities in other areas, such as coordinating diplomatic relations, and organizing the allocation of system defence resources between the member systems. This organization was also planned to have a limited degree of autonomy (though not on the same scale as the nearby League of Antares). The Duke petitioned the Imperial government in 1085, and after several months of discussions, both on Capitol, and on Antares, his plan was accepted. The Antares Ring Confederation (ARC) officially came into being on 049-1086.

The story of the region since that time has been one of continuing economic success. The starport facilities of two of the member systems, Sarar and Taira (1115 and 1215) have been upgraded since 1077, and the Ring Cluster has been expanded to become a major system forum for economic planning and debate. This success has also helped to restore some of the cultural identity that the region had previously lost under the Third Imperium — the people of the Ring Cluster feel a common bond of sent him — he was killed in an explosion on a ground-to-orbit shuttle five days before the Sarar carrier arrived in the Antares system. Abrams was then summoned to Antares by Magistrate of the world he discussed his future, and that of Sarar's subsector. On 153-1077, Konrad Abrams' ascent to the Duchy was confirmed by the Archduke, and a new chapter in Sararian history had begun.

It was originally the Duke's intention to replace Sarar's Civil Service Bureaucracy with a Representative Democracy, but Abrams found that the problems were too great. He reformed the government, and then turned his attention to Sarar's subsector, and aggressively pursuing the region's trade interests throughout the surrounding subsectors, and also investing extensively in technological research and development. He was also concerned with savings in the County of Sarar (1015, 1115, 1116, 1215, 1216, 1316, 1317 Antares), with a view to improving their economies as well.

loyalty to the ARC government.
(This article was drafted by the Department of Information, Central Discovery, Sarar, on 230-1116.)
(How the Rebellion will affect the ARC region is, at best, decidedly unclear. Konrad Abrams is now an old man, and has handed much of the responsibility for the administration of the Confederation to his son, the Count of Sarar, and the Duke now follows primarily a diplomatic role in working with the other worlds of the subsector.)
The population of the Confederation is primarily Solomani, and with the newly-discovered cultural identity of the region, it could well find itself at odds with Archduke Brzk, not least because, for historical reasons, the ARCers oppose Brzk's alliance with the Julians.)

PERSONALITY: KARL ABRAMS

Karl Abrams' full title is President of the Antares Ring Confederation, Leader of the Ring Council, Count of Sarar, Marquis of Sarar. He has been in the public eye since childhood, and has been most carefully groomed since then to succeed his father. He became Count of Sarar, and President of the ARC in 1114, and since then has proved to be a very capable leader.

While his father, the Duke, can best be described as an idealist, Karl Abrams is far more realistic in his outlook. His is far too shrewd a politician merely to bask in his father's reflected glory. He is fully aware of the surge in nationalistic sentiment in the ARC region, and intends to harness those feelings to further his own objectives. His overriding desire is to keep the Ring Cluster system intact, and to maintain, or increase, the ARC's influence with Antares Sector.
Relations between the Count and Archduke Brzk have been cool, at best, since an acrimonious series of trading disputes between the ARC and the League of Antares early in 1115. So, from Karl Abrams' point of view, if, to ensure the survival of the ARC systems, he has to oppose Brzk's leadership, then so be it.

Mendan sector was prepared in anticipation that it, along with Meshan (being prepared by Barry Osritt) might be included in SECOND SURVEY. Unfortunately, their inclusion seems very unlikely at this date.

BRZK — A Second Look
by Mike Mikesh

During the discussions with Marc Miller at Atlanticcon '88, I suggested an enhancement to the Brzk proposed by Charles Kimball in 1983. Marc found this approach to the Archduke appealing and added some thoughts of his own. This article extends from that. — MM

Soegz rose to greatness during the Second Frontier and Civil Wars (615-622), and for his reward, Arbellaatra placed his line at the head of the Antares Domain. As archdukes, however, his descendants were mediocre. But this was well since power rested mostly with the sector dukes. Until Stephon ascended the Throne, archdukes were principally figure heads with few powers. Still, under the new order, Archduke Ngaez and later Brzk remained Imperial leaders of little note.

This changed, however, with the advent of the Rebellion. Brzk quickly distinguished himself as a diplomatic genius with an uncanny ability to maneuver and manipulate the political elements. Instead of being buffeted helplessly by political winds, he's very much in control. Others must react to events. Brzk, on the other hand, creates events.

The reason for Brzk's brilliant success has much to do with his Vargr heritage. The political climate of the Extents is almost continually turbulent. Soegz came from a family whose traditions and training often resulted in strong and capable Vargr leaders. Soegz was such a leader, but also had a talent for dealing with humans, allowing him to excel in his service to Arbellaatra.

With each generation, the title of Archduke was not passed to the first child, as with most human noble families. Instead, it always went to the offspring or grandchild that best displayed the talents and inclinations that brought the family to power. But Brzk was more than the end result of this, as Ngaez recognized quite early. He gave special attention to Brzk's training, and sent the young Vargr into Meshan to be tutored under other Vargr leaders. When Brzk returned, Ngaez stepped down in favor of his son for reasons that remain unclear.

Brzk is truly a political genius perfectly suited for the times of the Imperial Rebellion. He also has an almost single minded ambition to ascend the Iridium Throne. But his Vargr heritage, the very thing that has given him such great advantage, also permanently blocks his ascension because of Anti-Vargr prejudice. I see him as a frustrated character. Throughout the Rebellion, he succeeds in nearly every endeavor, but fails each time he is ready to try for the Throne.

The League of Antares joined with the Julian Protectorate on 012-1118. Although the REBELLION SOURCEBOOK implies that he turning his back on the Imperium, there is perhaps much more involved. His abandonment is only an illusion he wanted to present to the Protectorate. He is really rejecting only Lucan's leadership. Brzk sincerely believes in the concept of the Imperium, and fully intends to rejoin. Until that time, however, he is accumulating power within the Imperium, and also in Meshan and the Protectorate.

The Julian Protectorate is an important element in this. In the time when the League of Antares was a part of the Protectorate, the union provided a defense against Lucan's naval strength. But this also established himself politically in the Mendan and Andukan sectors. Even when he withdrew from the Protectorate, he still maintained those ties to exploit in the future. Ultimately, he envisions a renewed Imperium with Meshan, Mendan, and Andukan fully incorporated into it.

Turning Point Adventures —
I don't see Brzk ever rising to Emperor. From HIWG and DSP surveys, I think we should rule him out as a possibility. However, I do see Brzk as potentially having enormous influence over the Rebellion's outcome. If he himself cannot become Emperor, he could be the deciding factor in raising someone else to the Throne.

The ANTARES Turning Point Adventure could use several things as subjects:

1) The Vargr:
   a) Stop Vargr invasions into Antares.
   b) Pacify Lishun sector.
   c) Establish alliances with political factions in Meshan.
2) Win the hearts and good will of the peoples in the Julian Protectorate.
3) Open trade relations with Sahmiys.

Brzk, as I described him here, could potentially succeed in all of these things. Player character activities should be used to gauge, either directly or indirectly, his degree of success. If the feedback cards indicate several failures, it could be interpreted that Brzk is devoting too much of his attention and resources toward his own ascension. When the time becomes ripe for him to have a hand in promoting someone else, he will not do so and fail even there to have influence.

Brzk could potentially become a great historical figure and legendary Imperial hero surpassing in renown his ancestor, Soegz. He can remain an Imperial Archduke of a domain perhaps more than doubled its original size. Or he might try to raise himself too high and fall completely from power. The ANTARES Turning Point Adventure could decide this fate.

DIASPORA: A SECTOR ANALYSIS
BY MARK GELMA, EDITOR/DEADWATER TRAVELLER TIMES

THIS ISSUE

Refer to a map of the Shattered Imperium. Rimward of Lucan's holdings and coreward of the Solomani Rim Sector is a large track of space. That space contains part of the Massilia Sector and all of the Diaspora Sector. This area is without any significant grouping of systems. As the Diaspora is not a sector bordering on another sector, Diaspora is dispersed for a number of key factors which I shall list.

LONG HISTORY
Diaspora is one of the older sectors of the Imperium. It originally existed as an outback of the First Imperium, almost to the edges of the Imperium. As such, it became the battlefield during the last of the Terran Confederation. It enjoyed a brief period of prosperity during the Second Imperium. At that time it was along the trade routes between the Solomani Rim and the coreward sectors of the Imperium. However, prosperity soon passed, because the Long Night arrived and governments neglected the area. Third Imperium regained the sector several centuries after its founding. Things were going well for the Solomani nobles until Emperor Zakirov broke the strength of the Solomani at the orbital battle in 676. During the formation of the Solomani Autonomous District, Diaspora suffered its first division. Half of the sector went to the Solomani Sphere and the coreward half remained with the Imperium. When the Solomani Rim War occurred, the Imperium regained the Solomani holdings of the sector as they pushed on toward Terra. This long history has made Diaspora a sector among the sectors and probably contributes to its present condition.

LEGACY
The history of the Diaspora Sector has left a strong legacy. The control of the sector shifted between Solomani, Solomani, and Imperial governments during its history. Strong sentiments for all societies remain among its citizens under one governing dominance.

LOCATION
When one looks at a map of the southern side of the sector, there are no Solomani engravings to the rimward and rimward sides of the sector. There are many similar engravings on the sector, but not on the rimward side. Lucas leaving his presence fleet. At the rimward end of the sector is a section of the Solomani territory. Finally, the rimward side is Daibei standing independent of the Imperium and defending its territory against the Solomani. With all these engravings around, there were no easy choices to join, and inevitably the sector chose none.

LEADERSHIP
The leadership of the sector had a lot to do with its present condition. First, there is the sector Duke Ender Alikaraganmar. Although he is a very skilled Duke, and a fairly likeable fellow, he is not a strong leader. He has not had a sector for very long. His political standing lies with the Solomani Rim Sector Duke could. However, when the fleets left at Capital, he had only recently gained his position and had not really strengthened it. When the Imperium shatter, he faltered. The nobility of the sector then made their own choices, many of them opposing those of other nobles. Duke Ender remains in control of only a small portion of the sector in the vicinities of Liberi, the sector capital. The rest of the sector is under control of Duces or Counts, depending on how it fragmented. In many cases, a world will stand alone. With no strong noble to unite them, the sector remains a dispersed grouping of duchies, counts, and independent baronies. Although the sector is young, the Solomani should be able to move through the sector in a piecemeal fashion. It probably would except the one strong personality in the sector: Sector Duke Ender Alikaraganmar. Admiral Ender is a strong leader with a lot of charisma. He also has a very good intelligence which probably accounts for the Solomani's defeat. She prepared her forces for war and was able to take Liberi before that sector capitulated to the Solomani. Admiral Ender believes very strongly in the principle of the Imperium. She has not declared for any of the contenders for the Iridium Throne. In the absence of a central sector government, Admiral Ender controls the space above the worlds in the name of the Imperium. She has met with little resistance from the nobility of the sector. Even though the Imperium may not agree with her principles, they recognize the need for a strong navy to patrol space. Admiral Nile is not popular with the Imperium, but he has too many other concerns to attack the sector. Jessica Nile may not survive the rebellion. However, her efforts to occupy space for the Imperium will aid the reintegration of the sector after the conflict has ended.

LUCAN'S INTERESTS (OR LACK OF INTEREST)
Lucan I is the Emperor of the largest portion of the Shattered Imperium. His interests have had an effect on the condition of Diaspora. They are in brief: Revenge against Dulinor- This seems to be Lucan's major drive. It is almost to the point of obsession, or beyond. Lucan has direct knowledge of the involvement of the assassin on Strophon (did Dulinor double cross Lucan?). He has allowed several sectors to suffer and caused several more to secede because of his desire for revenge.

Lucan Viliari Empire - In removing themselves from the empire, the Viliari have made their enemies list. As such they warrant some attention from the rebels against them. Lucan will still devote more attention to the Viliari.

"Real" Strophon- Regardless of his legitimacy, this man and his little sphere of space are at least a minor threat to Lucan. Therefore he must deal with him accordingly.

Righteous Margaret- Although her interests are not in attacking Lucan directly, she does have some legitimacy. Therefore, Lucan must deal with her or perhaps attack her. The Viliari must base their plans off balance.

Resistive Daibei- Lucan abandoned Corridor and Lishun to the Viliari, and the Old Expanses to the Solomani. He apparently would have done the same to Daibei, but they resisted him and withdrew from the Imperium. Although they are keeping the Solomani at bay, they could side with Dulinor should the Imperium fall. Lucan will probably use whatever means to keep them from doing so.

Regressive Antares- Bigotry and a desire for revenge have Lucan attacking Antares. Archduke Bzak has a large power block, and if applied to the wrong side, could turn the rebellion against Lucan. Therefore Lucan must keep him off balance.

Roguish Vargr- They have taken Corridor, but there is little Lucan can do about that now. That's the problem of Norris and the Viliari. The Vargr have also taken Lishun, and could mass further. Lucan must direct some of his forces to counter this threat.

Rufian Solomani- The Solomani can not directly attack Lucan's area of space. He does, however, have a very loyal supporter in the Sector Duke of the Solomani Rim Sector. The Solomani are attacking that duke's region, in what has become a battle of wills. The duke will not take stand unless he is given at least token reinforcements to them, but they must travel through Massilia and Diaspora to get there.

Region of Diaspora- They have not declared for Lucan as a sector, but neither have they declared against him. Although admiral Nile has resisted his orders on several occasions, he is keeping the Solomani in check and remaining in place of Adimiral Nile. He is the only sector in the name of the Imperium. A significant number of systems considers Lucan the Emperor of the Imperium, therefore he lets them be. After all, he has a long list of other concerns.

LINES OF COMMUNICATION
We have seen that Diaspora is a link between Core and the Solomani Rim. It is significant that it lies on the most direct path between the two. It also provides a path of least resistance. Admiral Nile is very one of the best examples of this fact and uses system defense bases to protect the Imperium. The sector is well protected and can be defended if necessary. They also periodically board vessels to be sure that they are not breaking the rebellion to Diaspora.

LIVELY SOL-SEC AGENTS
With as much Solomani influence as Diaspora has had, it is a natural breeding ground for Solomani sentiments. With such sentiments come that infamous branch of the Solomani government: Sol-Sec. Sol-Sec is extremely significant to the condition of Diaspora, spreading propaganda quite liberally, and damaging the war effort where they could. Fortunately, Admiral Nile's Naval Intelligence was able to ferret the majority of the Sol-sec agents out of the fleet. Therefore there was little detection or dissent in that quarter. Nevertheless, Sol-Sec is still a presence in the sector.

This is the case for the condition of Diaspora and the factors that contributed to that condition. I will be discussing more on the personalities of the Sector Duke and Sector Admiral in later articles. If you have any questions, comments, or opinions, please feel free to write me. My address is 1502 Riverfront Court Suite 302, Virginia Beach, VA 23451.
PERSONALITY: NORRIS
by Mike Mikesh

During GenCon/Origins, Marc Miller made some interesting remarks about Dulinor, Lucan, and Norris. Although his comments were not fully developed, this article is derived from them intending to flesh them out with a particular focus on Norris. In fact, this material about Norris is presently being worked into an article for CHALLENGE.

One of Marc's comments was that all three men are similar in that they will do anything they have to to achieve their ends. This means to me that illegal, even immoral, activities are not beyond any of them. But this isn't to suggest they are necessarily villainous or that they are each incarnations of the same corrupt character type. Each one is still quite different in those style, personality, and objectives.

The label of "villain" is perhaps most applicable in the case of Lucan. Lucan was discussed at greater length in T64, and so won't be dealt with further here.

Dulinor, on the other hand, isn't so simple. As suggested by Marc, Dulinor was a talented manager and economist seeking power in the name of prosperity. He was believed by many and as a result was advanced in rank step by step. However, his real interest (whether conscious or subconscious) was in power for himself. His programs were not entirely successful, but where they did fail he convincingly blamed them on his lack of authority to affect certain changes. In result, he was given more power so that he might succeed in the delivery of his promises. Finally, as Archduke, he made Strepheon his scapegoat, accusing him before the people of the Ilelish domain as being an impediment. He then tried to elevate himself that final step by assassinating the Emperor.

Lucan and Dulinor are similar in that both want to be the ruler. Norris differs in that he wants to succeed at being a ruler. His methods are often questionable, and in some instances blatantly illegal. But his are meant more to bring benefit to those under his authority than necessarily enhance his power.

The first example of this was published in THE SPINWIND MARCHES CAMPAIGN, page 11. A warrent giving him command of Imperial forces during the Fifth Frontier War was suspected lost on an interdicted world. He gambled his career by violating the interdiction. Fortunately, the warrent was there which gave him the legal authority to be on the world. He thereafter took command and turned the tide of the war.

The second remains so far unpublished. Norris was NEVER appointed as Archduke of Deneb. When he received advanced word that Sterphon was assassinated, he created a forged document establishing himself as the Archduke. He publicly announced his elevation, and took full control of the domain before public word (at J-4) of Sterphon's death arrived. Had Norris not done this, the domain would have fragmented in the ensuing chaos of the Rebellion.

The third example was an extension of my discussions with James Ward (see T64 page 2, "Courier"). Below is a reprint of my 7/16/88 letter to Marc Miller about it, which we discussed at GenCon/Origins.

In examining Deneb's situation in the context of the Rebellion, I can appreciate how lucky it was the Vargr cut off Corridor. Norris is probably hoping it stays that way. In fact, he has every reason to actively keep it closed, although covertly.

What do you think of this scenario? The Vargr began raiding and pillaging, and even captured Depot. The Depot Naval personnel initially refused to aid the Vargr with technical support. Later the commanding officers "succeeded to pressures", but Depot. The Depot Naval personnel initially refused to aid the Vargr with technical support. Later the commanding officers "succeeded to pressures", but Norris arranged it for them.

Vland doesn't want to "waste" its resources needlessly during the effort to restore the Ziru Sirka, so they have little concern for what happens in Corridor. Norris, however, also has troubles of his own, and cannot spare fleets to patrol that sector. So, with the cooperation of the Depot commander, he established a secret alliance with one Vargr faction, the one he feels he can trust the most.

This one faction, given the support of Depot, will rise to leadership and quickly absorb all the other factions. There are, however, two stipulations. 1) The destruction and killing must be minimized. (Evolution toward a constructive state is encouraged. Extortion and ransom payments become tributes which become taxes.) 2) All traffic through Corridor must be stopped except by special arrangement.

Norris can afford to be very generous with his concessions and sincerity because the Vargr factions will only grow big before it collapses. Its life expectancy should be just long enough to suit Norris's designs.

Marc viewed this idea with approval. Of the multiple choice responses I offered, he circled, "A) Sounds like a good idea. Assume this is what's happening for now."

These last two examples are still unofficial until they see professional print. However, they are demonstrative of Marc's current view of the Archduke. Norris is a leader who's first concern is his subjects. He's a hero to the people of Deneb, and it probably quite desirable of the label. He is very daring, a quality well suited for the times.

But Marc acknowledges that he could eventually meet with catastrophic ruin. Norris may well be on the road to becoming the man that reunites the Imperium. However, I can see yet another somewhat dramatic role. His entire career is based on loyalty to his subjects. But when he finally confronts Capital, he forgets this and fails, following the road of many a classical tragic character.

Tiffany Star #6 -- Nov-Dec 88 -- page 9
The first line of defense of the THIRD IMPERIUM at its height was often claimed to be the Imperial Navy. But even the Navy admitted at times that the Navy was the second line of defense: the first line was the sheer size of the Imperium. For a message to traverse the Third Imperium between two points on the border could well require a year. For a message to travel from the same source to the same destination travelling outside the Imperium would take at least two years if by rare occurrence, Jump Boat service was actually available along the intended route. Realistic times of travel were more like four or five years. This size assured that any trouble occurring on one border of the Third Imperium could be dealt with adequately by the Navy before alien support from another front could be applied.

About 1075-1080, however, there occurred the phenomenon called the Grand Outworld Conspiracy (GOC). The GOC is the AAB designation of an agreement, rarely formal, among many non-Imperium states to attack the Imperium upon word of the death of Strophon. Because of the magnitude of the number of states bordering the Imperium, and the number of dissatisfied groups within the Imperium, the GOC could never be a carefully guarded secret. Thousands of documents at Vland relate to this conspiracy ranging from speculation to formerly classified data from several governments and spy organizations.

The GOC exposed a flaw in the first line of defense of the Third Imperium. Because the Imperium might fall to a coordinated attack on all fronts, there was deep concern within Naval Intelligence to do something about it. An organization: SNMD, was formed in 1082 to formulate policy and to take action to prevent the defeat of the Imperium by GOC coordinated external and internal forces. "Source of Mainline Naval Defense" is the most frequent meaning listed for the acronym SNMD. But the deepest meaning is: "Strophon Must Never Die!" The direction of the policy and actions developed was to assure that Strophon's death would be unknown when it did occur.

While many naval defense postures and policies were modified due to pressure exerted by the GOC, the key work to defend against his external threat was done by the SNMD to assure that Strophon did not die. Four main groups existed within SNMD. First was the policy group which tracked the record of the GOC, and set policy to overcome it. The second group was the only one aware of the other three branches of the SNMD. In fact, it was the only group to be aware of and using the name "SNMD." The early formation of this key part of SNMD considered three projects worthy of serious consideration: replacing Strophon with a clone, with a computer simulation, or with a robot. All three of these methods were indeed tried.

In each of the three methods tried, method of fooling the GOC was by replacing Strophon when he died. Unfortunately, the scheme leaked out. Strophon was publicly slain by Dulinor who has every reason for wanting his deed to be known by all. The consideration of the guiding group for SNMD assumed Strophon would die (either by assassination or natural causes) in private. Few sources exist for detailed study of this group; the few sources which do exist are in agreement on the above stated details.

The second group worked on developing cloning technology in relation to Strophon. When first formed, the technology was not available to adequately create true clones. It was available before Strophon died in 1116. No source independent of the documents stated above exist for this group. However, some of the results are rumored at in the data concerning the "real" Strophon of Gushegemege.

A third group investigated was using computer simulation to replace/supercede Strophon. Over three dozen independent documents witness to the success of this group. They did indeed develop an adequate computer simulation of Strophon. However, they were never able to successfully determine how their simulation could replace the real Strophon. The simulation could independently act in all ways like the real Strophon. Unfortunately, its obvious limitation defeated it: it could never be like Strophon face to face. It could only be like Strophon via communications channels.

Of the documented 126,870 video tapes of Strophon catalogued here at Vland, 24 are known to be products of this simulation of Strophon. No known instrumentation has determined any significant difference between the simulated Strophon and the main body of these videos. Note here that there are the group of 38 Veledano (named after the Villani discover) tapes which do differ significantly from the main body and are probably either forged Strophon Videos or possibly the product of the next group's success.

The fourth and final group worked on robotic replacements for Strophon. Data significant enough to determine the success of this project is still unavailable. However, the technology available by 1110 should have been sufficient to solve all technical problems. Literature after 1110 from several Imperium places indicate the presence of robots capable of fooling the GOC into believing the robot was a real sophont. Even as late as 1116, however, one using technical equipment would have been able to determine the difference between a robot and a real sophont in a face to face encounter.

There are several independent proofs that one or all three of these methods were applied (and with the approval of the real Strophon). A short discussion of two of these proofs follows:

The appearance of the "real" Strophon in Gushegemege Sector in 1117 could well have been due to the efforts of one of the groups which worked in secret within the Imperium from 1083 to 1116. Which of the three groups is still a matter of speculation. We note here that the cataloguers at Vland document the 847 "real" Strophon videos separate from the Strophon of Core videos. In fact it has been tested with 27 students of Strophon from the AAB that they can distinguish 97% of the time between "real" Strophon videos and Strophon Videos (Amserian Study, 1137). If the "real" Strophon of Gushegemege Sector is a result of SNMD activities, it was not a fully successful result.

The 1107-1111 Fifth Frontier War is believed to have been begun by the Zhodani to implement GOC agreements. There was indeed an attempted assassination of Strophon early in 1107, the news of which could have reached the Zhodani before the war started. According to the unverified story, the Zhodani intelligence on Capital did get the message of the attempted assassination to the Zhodani officials in the Consulate. But the word came as a successful assassination. The Zhodani were the only ones aware of the word that Strophon was dead. The Zhodani were the only ones to start a war as specified by the GOC principles. Other states involved in the Fifth Frontier War were involved because the Zhodani could not stop it once it was begun; and the other states were required to go along with the war. Insufficient data exists to prove or disprove this account.

The purposes of SNMD would have been served if this account is true; even though Strophon "died," the universe goes on as though he did not. If indeed the real Strophon died at this time the SNMD was undeniably successful: even in face to face encounters with those who know Strophon well, the replacement "Strophon" was indistinguishable from the real Strophon.
